U.K. Invites 2 in PLO to Attend Talks

AQABA. Jordan — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain said Friday that she had invited two senior members of the Pales-tine Liberation Organization to talks in London in "a fresh step in the Middle East peace process."

The move, which the prime minister said was aimed at facilitating a greater U.S. role in peace negotiations, was said to be the first at such a high level between the British government and PLO officials.

It was immediately condemned by Jewish leaders in Britain. [Israel said Friday that the meeting would not advance the cause of in a scandal which, they said, has peace, United Press International reported from Tel Aviv. [A Foreign Ministry spokesman

The men will join two Jordanian officials, Deputy Prime Minister Abdul-Wahab al-Majali and Foreign Minister Taher al-Masri, for a meeting in London with Sir Geoffrey Howe, the foreign secretary.

~ Analysts said the meeting, which is expected to take place next month, signaled a major shift in Britain's attitude to the PLO.

Mrs. Thatcher said her decision was based on a desire to promote King Hussein's peace initiative and help the United States take a similar step. She said the U.S. govern-ment had been informed of plans for the talks.

The peace process has been delayed, Mrs. Thatcher said, by probrems in arranging a meeting bedelegation and Richard W. Murphy, the U.S. special envoy to the Middle East.

Mrs. Thatcher's announcement came after two days of talks with King Hussein, who has been trying most of the year to revive peace negotiations. It reflected a readiness to go much further than Washington has been prepared to go in dealing with the PLO, analysts

PARIS - Defense Minister Charles Hernu resigned Friday af-ter being confronted with mount-ing signs that French intelligence agents were linked to the sinking of Greenpeace ship in New Zealand and had covered up their role dur-ing an official inquiry.

Also Friday, France's external intelligence chief. Vice Admiral

Pierre Lacoste, was dismissed after he refused to answer Mr. Hernu's written questions about French activities in New Zealand, government officials said.

President François Mitterrand said he had accepted the defense minister's resignation with "sad-ness, regret and gratitude."

He noted that they had been friends for more than 30 years and thanked Mr. Hernu for "having directed with honor and competence the Ministry of Defense."

Mr. Mitterrand appointed Paul Quilès, minister of transport, urban development and housing, to re-place Mr. Heruu. Jean Auroux, deputy transport minister, took over from Mr. Quilès.

Mr. Quilès was instructed by Prime Minister Laurent Fabius to continue an investigation of the secret service's "shortcomings" begun by Mr. Hernu. Government sources said Mr. Quilès was asked to submit his report within a week.

Admiral Lacoste's refusal to answer questions seemed to many commentators to imply French guilt in the bombing of the Green-peace ship. The admiral said that any information he divulged might endanger French agents.

Diplomats and French commentators said Mr. Hernu's resignation was one of the most serious political blows that Mr. Mitterrand has suffered in his four years as president. WASHINGTON - The congressional rebellion against President Ronald Reagan's trade policies has accelerated with approval by a House subcommittee of legislation that would reduce American imports of textiles and apparel by up to 40 percent. The action came as Representa-

JAMES GORDON BENNETT BALLOON RACE

Geneva, September 28/29, 1985

The world's most prestigious balloon race was created in 1906 by James Gordon Bennett, Jr., founder of the International Herald Tribune.

That year, a quarter of a million spectators watched sixteen gas-filled balloons from 6 countries rise from the Turleries Gardens in Paris. The object of the race: fly the farthest distance before landing.

The rules haven't changed over the years, and the departure of the 1985 Gordon Bennett Balloon Race from Geneva will be equally spectacular: an illuminated night take-off.

Eighteen balloons from 11 countries will participate. Held at the Centre Sportif in Vessy, just outside Geneva, the Saturday night take-off will be the highlight of a weekend of aeronautic events.

Admission: F.S. 10 valid for both days. For additional information, contact the International Herald Tribune in Paris, Tel. 747 12 65, ext. 4566, or Patrick Kearley in Geneva, Tel. 983 862.

Experts Say Earthquake Struck in High-Risk Area

NEW YORK - The earthquake that devastated parts of Mexico occurred in an area of frequent earth-quake activity, where major quakes recur every 60 years or so, experts say. They indicated it was just a matter of time before the next one

The quake occurred about 200 miles (320 kilometers) west of Mex-ico City, off Mexico's Pacific coast, where a small piece of the Earth's crust called the Cocos plate is being pushed underneath the coast of Mexico, said Craig Nicholson, a

Mr. Nicholson, who works at Columbia University's Lamont-Doherty Geophysical Observatory in Palisades. New York, said Thursday that the Cocos plate had "been responsible for a number of large earthquakes that have occurred along the coast of Mexico."

"Enormous heat and pressure suddenly," he said.

From records of past earthquakes, seismologists have been able to identify "gaps" where new ones have not occurred for a number of years and are most likely to strike. The earthquake Thursday apparently was in such a gap.

Dr. Lynn R. Sykes of the Lamont-Doherty Observatory said the earthquake occurred "smack in the middle of one of the biggest gaps along that coast."

This one damaged Mexico City in a way that none of the others did because it was closer to the city than the other coastal earthquakes.

Dr. Christopher H. Scholz, also of the Lamont-Doherty Observa-tory, said the closest earthquakes to the gap in which Thursday's temblors occurred were in 1973, with a magnitude of 7 5 on the open-end-

De Lorean Indicted on Fraud Charges

DETROIT (AP) — A federal grand jury returned a 15-count indictment Friday against John Z. De Lorean, the former automaker, alleging that he defrauded investors of $8.9 million, U.S. Attorney Joel M. Shere

The indictment charged Mr. De Lorean with racketeering and other federal crimes involving mail fraud, wire fraud, interstate transportation of stolen money, income tax evasion and causing false tax returns to be filed, Mr. Shere said.

Mr. De Lorean, who was acquitted in August 1984 of cocaine conspiracy charges, sought protection from creditors in 1982 under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act when his sports car company in North Ireland faced insolvency. The case was later converted to liquidation under Chapter 7 of the act.

Of Many Aliens in U.S.

By Mary Thornton ton Post Service .WASHINGTON - The Senate has approved a landmark revision of U.S. immigration laws that would grant amnesty to those who entered the country illegally before Jan. 1, 1980, and provide civil and criminal penalties for employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens. The vote Thursday, after seven days of debate, was 69-30.

The legislation now moves to the House, where a Judiciary subcommittee began hearings last week on its version.

The Senate approved immigra-tion packages in 1982 and 1983. The House passed a companion bill last year, but it died in conference committee in the final days of the

The most controversial portion of the bill is a program to admit up to 350,000 foreign agricultural workers to pick perishable fruits and vegetables.

In its revised form, the bill calls for the program to end in three venrs unless Congress revives it. The foreign-workers program originally was proposed by Senator Pete Wilson, Republican of Cali-

White House official says that President Ronald Reagan plans to make his space-based defense program a central theme of his meeting in November with Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader. The official said Thursday that Mr. Reagan would seek to center the discussions on the Strategic Defense Initiative, rather than on nuclear offensive weapons. "We will tell them that there is a new technology here which may give us a different way of doing things better," the official said. He said Mr. Reagan would "point out that the underlying premises on which offensive deterrence is founded has been undermined. The comments, during a briefing, made it plain that the president was adamant about not negotiating a deal with the Soviet Union on space weapons.

In a news conference Tuesday, Mr. Reagan ruled out any deal by which the United States would forgo development and testing of the space-based system in exchange for to modify the Anti-Ballistic Missile deep cuts in Soviet offensive nucle-

The senior White House official said the president would seek to discuss a "strategy that defends and does not threaten anyone." "He will say, 'Will it not be better to adopt a system that does not involve any threats at all?" the aide said. In focusing on the space-based approach, Mr. Reagan will move away from the limitation of offensive weapons, the traditional concem of arms control. The Strategic Defense Initiative, which would rely mostly on spacebased weapons to shoot down in-coming missiles, has become the Russians chief target in the Geneva arms negotiations, which re-

The United States believes some testing of the space-based program is permitted under the treaty, the official said. That position is challenged by the Russians and by some American specialists.

The ABM treaty bans tests of any space-based or air-based antimissile system or component of a system, and precludes the introduction of new technology without new negotiations.

The official said the Soviets have expressed interest in revising some aspects of the 1972 treaty. Another official said later this interest by Moscow was clearly designed to limit U.S. testing of the Reagan space-based defense program, not to permit testing of it.

U.S. Shot Down 'Useful' Satellite

By Walter Pincus Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - The Solwind satellite destroyed last Friday during the first test of a U.S. anti-satellite weapon was providing "very useful data" on solar activity until the moment it was hit. according to astrophysicists who were surprised and upset at seeing a fruitful experiment used as a military target.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger as recently as Thursday referred to the target as a "burned-out satellite."

But a physicist, Robert M. MacQueen, director of the high-altitude observatory of the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Colorado, said Thursday that it was "deplorable" that the Pentagon "had taken a scientifically useful thing and sacrificed it in this way."

The satellite carried seven experiments into space six years ago for the Naval Research Laboratory and other government agencies. One experiment used a coronagraph that sent images to Earth of activity on the surface of the sun during each of the satellite's orbits, or roughly 15 times a day, several astrophysicists said.

Several months ago, scientists of the Naval Research Laboratory were asked to draft what a source said "they thought was a routine paper to justify continued operation of their coronagraph." They acknowledged problems with the spacecraft. the source said, but wrote that it should continue. In July, however, they were told that "the satellite would be turned off sometime after Aug. 1, but they weren't told how," the source said. Solvind became the target for the anti-satellite test after the original target, an instrumented bal-loon, became plagued with technical problems. The air force has another satellite, Solar Max.

Mr. MacQueen, whose organization designed Solar Max and runs it for the air force, said that the continuous observations of the Solwind satellite, stretching from a period of maximum solar activity in 1980 through minimal activity recently, were erv valuable.

He said the data has been sought by the air force to determine the effect of the sun's surface activities on the upper atmosphere and particularly on ielecommunications.

[The Pentagon acknowledged Friday that a scientific satellite used as the target for an antisatellite weapon last week was still providing some useful information at the time of its destruction, The Associated Press reported from Washington.

[Robert B. Sims, the Pentagon's chief spokesman, nonetheless defended the selection of the Solwind satellite as the target for the anti-satellite weapon, saying it was definitely failing and was expected to expire at any time."

"That particular spacecraft had not fared well." Mr. Sims said, "Termination of satellite support would have been required in early 1987 in any event. But the fact is, we expected it to expire at

America, Debtor Nation

The Commerce Department took official notice this week of a symbolic event in America's economic life. Some time a few months ago, it has now been confirmed, U.S. public and private investments abroad no longer exceeded the value of foreign holdings of the country's public and private assets. In that sense. America became a debtor nation.

Joining the ranks of the world's Micawbers has no immediate consequence for the American people. There is no debtor's prison for nations. The change in status should not cause the country to hold its head less high in the councils of nations, even if, as is expected, the United States displaces Brazil as the world's largest debtor. Nor is it in any way likely that foreign investors will suddenly liquidate their U.S. holdings, leaving the United States scrambling to pay off its foreign debts.

The significance of the debt measure is that it takes broad account of the U.S. economic position vis-à-vis the rest of the world. As President Reagan suggested at his press conference on Tuesday, the merchandise trade deficit, the focal point of recent concern, does not tell the whole story. The United States could afford to go on importing far more goods - shoes, dresses, tape recorders, automobiles and so on - than it is able to export if that merchandise imbalance were offset by U.S. investments abroad. The trouble, which the president did not acknowledge, is that the huge merchandise deficits have overwhelmed surpluses in the service accounts. As a result, America has been amassing foreign debt.

The cost of paying interest and other returns to the foreign holders of that debt further aggravates the current balance-of-payments problem, since the United States can no longer depend on net returns from its foreign investments to help offset trade deficits. In the long term, that means that the country may have to sacrifice some of its standard of living to finance its foreign obligations.

As Mr. Reagan observed, the United States ew and prospered as a debtor nation in the 19th century, when it imported huge amounts of foreign capital and labor to exploit its enormous resource base — an investment that paid off handsomely both in America and abroad. The difference now is that capital formation at home has not, at least so far, been commensurate with the inflow of foreign capital. Instead much of the recent foreign borrowing has gone to finance private consumption through tax cuts, and public consumption through government spending. In a very real sense, the country is borrowing from its future.

— THE WASHINGTON POST.

When a reporter asked President Reagan at his news conference this week whether he was disturbed that America had become a debtor nation, Mr. Reagan was well primed. Why, that conveys a false impression, he said. If foreigners are investing more in America than they borrow, it is not a sign of weakness but a vote of confidence in the American economy.

That is how it worked in the 19th century, when the United States emerged as a great economic power. That is how it is working now, as foreigners buy stocks and bonds in dollars "because we are the best and safest investment in the world." Mr. Reagan is right in believing that the United States could not become a debtor nation unless foreigners wanted to buy and hold a piece of the American rock. And he is probably right that some of that inflow is explained by the belief that dollar assets are safer than the alternatives.

But he glossed over the aspect of America's slide into debt that is truly disquieting: The policies that have taken it there are destroying markets for efficient American producers and setting the stage for a lower standard of living.

In the 19th century, everyone benefited from European investment in America. The Europeans got a higher return than from comparably risky projects at home. American business was able to expand more rapidly than would have been possible with access only to domestic savings. The wealth generated by foreign investments in American railroads. factories and mines far exceeded the debt. If foreign capital once again represented the icing on a large and bountiful investment cake, there would be little to worry about.

In fact, however, foreign investment is simply filling the hole left as the federal government sucks up private savings to cover its own budget deficit. When the time comes to return the capital with interest, Americans will be left with less to invest and consume.

That future burden is growing at an aston-ishing rate. By the estimate of the Business Roundtable, the net debt of the United States to foreigners under current policies is likely to reach $1 trillion in 1990. Would America be better off without the influx of European and Japanese investments? Cutting off foreign capital without increasing the amount generated at home would force businesses, households and government to bid for slices of a smaller pie. The competition would raise interest rates or ignite inflation or both. On the other hand, if Washington came to grips with the deficit and thus freed domestic savings for private productive uses, Americans would no longer need to mortgage the future to foreigners in order to pay today's bills. Reducing the demand for foreign capital, moreover, would reduce the exchange value of the dollar. That, in turn, would allow efficient American farmers and manufacturers to win back their place in world markets.

Debts to foreigners are not in themselves ominous. What counts is how the foreign capital is being used. By that test, the rush of foreign investment is plainly a threat.

Serious Textbooks, Please

America's textbook war has taken a new turn. Only a few years ago the creationists were on the attack. Mel and Norma Gabler, the Texan couple who have made a career of reviewing textbooks, inspired Texas in 1974 to require that high school biology textbooks mention evolution as "only one of several explanations of the origins of mankind." To that command, textbook publishers sat up and saluted. Texas purchases textbooks on a statewide basis; with the second highest number of

But last summer the Texas board of education voted 23 to 2 to repeal the one-of-severalexplanations rule. And two weeks ago California's board of education rejected more than 20 textbooks. The state superintendent of public instruction, elected in 1982 on a back-to-basics platform, charged publishers with "watering down books and lowering standards because they think that's what the market wants," and he promised more rejections. "It's not just science books. It's history, literature." California buys 11 percent of America's textbooks; it is the one market that is bigger than Texas. It is dismaying to see political officials in the business of textbook selection and editing; however good their intentions, the results too often make education insipid. Consider the school boards that try to keep pupils from reading "Huckleberry Finn," or the company that took "ice cream" out of the title of a short story because it seemed to advocate junk food.

But if there is going to be intervention, then it should be based on the principles that Caliare not trying to impose their personal views but rather to apply rigorous intellectual tests to the textbooks. Are they accurate? Do they fairly and fully represent the best of human learning? Or do they suppress or misrepresent scientific theory in order to curry favor with particular political constituencies?

The textbook war is not over, but this latest turn in it is welcome for telling publishers that publishing intellectually rigorous texts is, in the long run, the best way to do business.

Reagan Overrides the Doubters

It was reassuring to hear President Reagan state so emphatically again that the SDI is not negotiable during its research and development phase. The president has been persistently let down by his bureaucracy, mostly in the State Department. Some members of the negotiating team at Geneva are also to blame.

These officials have been determined to turn the SDI program into a bargaining chip. They have misrepresented the president all along. This official subversion in the administration goes deeper, by casting doubts on the technical feasibility of the SDI program when all the available achievements of the last two years show its increasing potential.

It is regarded as unfortunate by many that the traditional policy of the United States compels the most cautious consideration of China's manifest desire to find a supporter in her struggle for advancement and security. At any rate the American public is doubtless prepared for the news that the visit of Prince Tsai-Hsun to the United States is generally regarded in China as of greater importance than the official announcements would indicate. It is intimated in Peking that the two purposes of the prince's visit are to sound Washington relative to "an alliance or the closest understanding," and to consult financial interests on loan for railroads, inter-

1935: War Specter Realigns Markets NEW YORK — Convincing signs that people on the American side of the Atlantic are beginning to take seriously the threat of war in Africa and the Mediterranean appeared [on Sept 20]. Perhaps the most important reaction was reflected in the commodity and security markets. Cotton and copper, both important war materials, showed gains. More evidence was reflected in the flight of capital from Europe, including the shifting of more than $8,000,000 of presumably hoarded gold from London to New York. Gold movements have reached such proportions that all available space on liners has been booked several days ahead. With the insurance companies no longer willing to quote firm rates for gold insurance, it was expected that nervousness in the foreign exchange market would increase.

AIDS: A Plague to Throw Big Money At

N EW YORK — Doctors know relatively little about AIDS. That is a fact. The number of cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome has doubled annually since the disease was first diagnosed in the. United States. That, too, is a fact. If the current rate of increase continued, the entire American popula-tion would be wiped out in 15 years. That is speculation. No one wants the public to panic —not the AIDS researchers, not government officials, not the victims, not the media. We are in cahoots for what appears a noble purpose. We are conspiring to keep the public calm.

Now for the good news. Most

AIDS authorities believe that the rate of spread will slow down considerably — although not in the next year or two. They believe this because blood screening has virtually elimi-nated AIDS-contaminated blood from blood banks, and freewheeling sex appears to be a waning sport.

Still, we are not talking about a common cold. We are talking about an incurable, fatal disease. If I had an AIDS-afflicted child,

I would not want him or her in school exposed to the countless minor infections that could be fatal to an AIDS child. I would rather have my child at home or in a quarantined learning situation while I prayed for doctors to come up with a cure.

Some children are diagnosed as tested and informed of the results. Health insurers probably should not be privy to results, lest premiums skyrocket for the "maybes." Public health planners could use more complete statistical data.

Whether an AIDS child or pre-AIDS child should attend school, whether an AIDS adult should be able to work in medicine, in dentistry or in a restaurant should not be matters for courts to decide. These are not civil rights issues (however much compassion we may feel for victims); but matters of public health. Rights of individual privacy may need to yield to restrictive measures to prevent the spread of this new plague.

Quarantine as public policy ought not to be considered lightly. We need to know more about AIDS as quickly as possible. It is a threat that the government should throw money at. More researchers need to look through the microscope and beyond it, at the diseased and at the healthy. And research must extend beyond the United States — particularly to Zaire, where AIDS is rampaging.

There have been 13,228 confirmed cases in the United States. The death toll rises daily. AIDS - or our ignorance about its potential - may be the most potent threat our nation faces. Where is our defense against it?

Protectionism Could Explode A Debt Bomb

By Tom Wicker

N EW YORK — The "mindless stampede to In protectionism against which President Reagan warned at his news conference on Tuesday probably would be aimed mostly at Japan — but the Latin American debtor nations could well be among its major victims, with grim consequences for Latin democracy, hemispheric security and the U.S. banking system.

These Latin nations, moreover, are already in deep trouble, belying glib assurances that the "debt crisis" has been eliminated by austerity measures and loan "restructuring." Even Mexi-co, which had been the regional leader in harsh self-disciplinary measures — most recently a new devaluation of the peso since midterm elections last summer - had announced before this week's catastrophic earthquake that it would require $2 billion to $3 billion in new foreign loans in 1986. Yet Mexico's foreign debt had risen from $90.6 billion in 1983 to $95.2 billion today.

Some U.S. bankers were saying that, despite its efforts, Mexico had not sufficiently improved its economic structure and practices to warrant the new loans, and that further austerity measures, under the supervision of the International Monetary Fund, would have to be imposed before new loans could be granted. But the real question may have been whether Mexico could sustain the unpopular steps it already had taken. Peru's new president, Alan Garcia Pèrez, has already announced that his country would pay only 10 percent of its export earnings this year against its $14-billion external debt. That is a course that other Latin leaders may find themselves under pressure to emulate. Brazil, with a foreign debt of more than $100 billion and a frail new civilian government, might yet welcome some alternative to IMF-imposed austerity.

Fidel Castro, meanwhile, is actively urging Latin nations to repudiate their debts. None of them seem likely to take this advice - but they might, if public resistance to austerity and economic recession becomes sufficiently heated.

States, under the domestic political pressure of the biggest trade deficit in its history, "stampedes" to conventional protectionism. That is a live threat, given the job losses and declining industries that the trade deficit represents, and with a congressional election year coming up.

Protectionist measures would restrict, first, the ability of these debtor nations to export their goods and commodities to the United States, and thus to earn what they need to repay their debts and expand their own economies and living standards - already restricted by austerity measures like high internal interest rates, increased taxes, reduced government spending and lower wages. If the Latin nations cannot export and expand their economies, moreover, they cannot afford to import from the United States — a necessity if the U.S. trade deficit is to be reduced. Worse, as Latin economies stagnate, as the living standards of Latin peoples decline and while these nations remain net exporters of badly needed capital to pay exorbitant interest on for-eign loans (few of them have any present prospect of repaying principal), they may not be able to contain the potential for political upheaval. Whether the result was revolt on the left or repression from the right, or both, democracy would suffer, with damage to regional stability The precarious position of the debtors will and U.S. security. If a radical and anti-American on those banks' stability. become downright dangerous if the United government emerged in Mexico, the New York investment banker Felix Rohatyn recently pointed out in a speech to the Southern Governors Association, it would pose "a greater potential security problem for the U.S. than anything that is likely to happen in El Salvador or Nicaragua." And if a Latin government repudiated its debt to win domestic political support - which might force other governments to do the same - the U.S. banking system could be shaken. U.S. banks hold about a third of the $350-billion Latin debt. some to an extent that exceeds their capital.

These dangers are real, but so is the tide of protectionism that Mr. Reagan warned against Thus, easing the debt burden on these nations is more urgent than ever, before protectionist steps can make their debt problems unmanageable. Mr. Roharyn urged what seems clearly to be in the long-term self-interest of the United States and the banks: that they stretch out shorter-term Latin loans to 25 or 30 years and cut interest rates drastically, in return for World Bank guarantees of the loan principal and regulatory relief for the short-term losses they would suffer.

There is less profit in such a course, but a lot more security for everyone involved — the Latin debtors, who are also the most important Latin democracies, the United States, the individual banks and the people and businesses that depend

The New York Times.

Sanctions: To Have Leverage You Need the Levers

OHANNESBURG — People J who support economic sanctions against South Africa generally urge them on two basic grounds: that they are the most forceful nonviolent expression of the abhorrence of apartheid, and that they can be used to pressure the South African government into steadily dismantling the whole structure of racial segregation and minority political control. The main sanction proposals from President Reagan, and even some of the further measures wanted by many in the U.S. Congress, are unlikely to have a significant additional adverse effect on the already depressed South African economy. Indeed, events have overtaken them in one of the most crucial areas — the plan to bar U.S. banks from making new loans to the South African government or publicly owned corporations.

Restrictions on U.S. computer sales to South Africa would be an irritation but not much more. The same applies to the prohibition of the sale of U.S. nuclear technology.

The warning light is there, how-ever, for President Pieter W. Botha. The problem with American attitodes on sanctions is that they embrace two contradictory principles.

On the one hand there is the stickand-carrot Sullivan code. This began as an attempt to compel U.S.-owned companies operating in South Africa to comply with comparatively high minimum standards in pay, condi-tions and opportunities for black workers. It has since been extended to a demand for direct commitments from those companies to work for fundamental political reform.

The code has had its successes. The American Chamber of Commerce in South Africa reckons that a clear majority of U.S. firms have gone along with it. Black pay in these companies has risen about 20 percent annually in the past five years — about a 30percent real rise after inflation.

But this has to be seen against the second element in the sanctions debate. Is the object to create change by actively promoting the economic advancement of blacks? That can be aided from the American side only by an appreciable business relationship with South Africa. The existing relationship appears, for example, to have made some contribution to the officially permitted development in recent years of black trade unions that have the legal right to strike.

By Howard Preece

weaken the South African economy foreign capital has probably been the so as to compel eventual capitulation most important single factor. by the Afrikaner nationalists who control the country? In that case the logical consequence during the next few years would be a severe deterioration in the living standards and job opportunities for blacks.

Since 1976, the year of the so-called Soweto riots, South Africa has been starved of long-term direct investment capital from abroad. The country needs an average annual growth rate of at least 5 percent to provide jobs for the annual rise in the work force, never mind cutting back on existing unemployment. During the past decade the rate has been not give the impression of seeing about 3 percent because of various causes, including the inefficiency that leaders tend to be ambivalent on the apartheid generates along with its in- divestiture issue, but hardly any of

The total number of jobless has been increasing by about 250,000 a year since 1976 and is now generally estimated to be close to 3 million. The unemployment burden has fallen overwhelmingly on blacks. Any intensification of sanctions must surely be considered against that background. Would it help or hinder the chance of peaceful reform?

It is easy to say from a distance that this hardship is an acceptable price for eventual emancipation. Most black workers who have been things that way. Black trade union humanity. But the lack of long-term them are calling for foreign companies to close their doors. It is a different matter for the mass of angry black youths who have never had jobsto lose. But can racial reconciliation be brought about by making that situation even worse? It is surely better to look for alternatives first.

America must certainly go beyond President Reagan's "constructive engagement." The president's sanctions will have the advantage of demon-strating unequivocally rightful detes-tation of apartheid in the United States. But to go much further than that at this stage would be to risk losing the game by playing too many cards at once. Leverage can be exerted only if there are levers left to pull.

But Yes, Economic Sanctions Do Work

N EW YORK — The debate over South Africa again raises the question of whether economic sanctions work. Each time the United States considers them, pundits flood the public with reminders about the League of Nations and Ethiopia, the oil embargo against Japan in 1941, 25 years of trade restrictions against Cuba and the United Nations sanctions against Rhodesia. President Jimmy Carter's grain embargo, triggered by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, is another favorite exam-ple of the foolishness of sanctions. To those who doubt the wisdom of sanctions, the "lessons of history" are clear: Italy conquered Ethiopia; Fidel Castro still rules Cuba; guerrilla warfare, not sanctions, brought down Rhodesia's white regime. And the Russians are still in Afghanistan.

But "what everybody knows" too easily becomes "what nobody questions." Italy did indeed conquer Ethiopia, yet Mussolini's reported remark to Hitler that he would have had to withdraw from Ethiopia in a week if sanctions had included oil suggests that they came closer to working than is generally recognized.

The oil embargo against Japan did not deter a Japanese attack, but it denied a vital resource to a country with whom war was likely anyway. The U.S. trade embargo has not Or is the aim to try to progressively toppled Fidel Castro, but it has weak- perfectly. Economic sanctions will

Fallacy: "If sanctions don't bite, they can't work." Even when the economic effects of sanctions are nil, the psychological or political effects may be worthwhile. Sanctions did not cripple the Rhodesian economy, but

Fallacy: "Never do anything that hurts us more than it hurts them." The relevant comparison is not between costs to the sanctioning and to the sanctioned. It concerns costs and benefits of the policy options available. Willingness to impose costs on oneself can be a way to demonstrate resolve and moral outrage,

Fallacy: "Alternatives don't matter." No matter how worthless sanctions appear to be in a given simation, policy-makers should not be criticized for using such measures unless more attractive options can be identified. In evaluating economic sanctions, it is wise to follow the example of the octogenarian who, when asked how he liked old age, replied that he liked it very much

Economic sanctions are unlikely to achieve spectacular results, but they do provide an appealing alternative when diplomacy seems too weak and military intervention is too strong. They deserve serious consideration despite the misleading conventional wisdom that they never work,

'Star Wars': Newfangled, Boomerang

By David S. Broder

LOS ANGELES — Some people think President Reagan is right about the dangers of trade protectionism. Others agree with him about the virtues of his Strategic Defense Initiative, the anti-nuclear missile. program. But he can hardly be right about both, because the argument he uses to justify one is flatly contradicted by the rationale for the other.

 $iJ_{j_{0}},\ldots$

W. . . .

He says you cannot build trade barriers at your borders without inviting retaliation, but you can ered a nuclear fence in space and no can should mind. That does not compute At his first formal news conference since his summer illness, Mr. Reagan said on Tuesday that protectionism is dangerous because it invites retaliation by trading partners. History as on his side. As he said, the most protectionist measure in recent American history, the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, was so disruptive of international trade that historians assign it substantial blame for the Great Depression that began in 1929.

In another breath, Mr. Reagan recontend that it will spread the arms race to the heavens. Not so, said the received of the property of the pro president. If research and testing. show the incredibly intricate antimissile shield to be feasible, why then all nations, including the Sovies Union, will see that nuclear weapons are futile and will agree to climinate existing atomic arsenals.

It is a nice dream, but it is contradicted by history and psychology. What Mr. Reagan said about trade. applies equally to the arms race:

"Protectionism is a two-way street." He compared "star wars" to gas masks and anti-aircraft guns. When "we outlawed poison gas in, 1925," he said, "everyone kept their gas mask, I think of this weapon as a kind of gas mask." But the analogy is wrong, because there has been no prior agreement to outlaw nuclear, missiles, nor is one in sight.

The anti-aircraft gun analogy; which he used to emphasize that the SDI is purely defensive, proves the opposite of what Mr. Reagan contends. The development of ever better anti-aircraft guns did not stop the production of bombers. It accelerated their improvement. Nations respond to rivals' improvements in defensive weapons by speeding the development of offensive weapons.

The introduction of radar-guided computerized anti-aircraft weapons (some firing heat-seeking ground-to-air missiles) did not faze the leaders of the U.S. Strategic Air Command or their Soviet counterparts. Instead it spurred them to build faster, sneakier bombers capable of baffling or evading the enemy defenses. If Mr. Reagan were right about the psychological impact of "star wars," the United States would not be developing the Stealth bomber or any other weapons system designed to overcome the latest advances in Soviet defensive technology.

The trade analogy holds: Defensive measures invite retorsion. Some may think it unfair to compare international trade and the nuclear arms race, or draw a parallel between the balance of payments and the balance of terror. But they are alike.

It is no accident that the wood "retaliation" applies in both trade discussions and arms control. The essential political psychology is the same. When a sovereign nation sees its vital interests threatened by actions of a rival, its almost inevitable tendency is to increase its own effort, not to back off. No one can imagine that the Soviet Union is less charvinistic about strategic weapons than Japan is about trade.

Japan and other countries with whom the United States has an unfavorable balance of trade survive only because of their ability to tap international markets. If the United States imposes tariffs or quotas on their products, they must respond. No: matter that their own behavior may well justify such action on America's well justify such action on America's part. If it acts, they must react.

Similarly with the Soviet Unionical and strategic arms. Ever since Working and strategic arms. Ever since Working War II brought massive losses to the Russian people, the first principle of the Soviet government has been assure its military parity, if not such premacy. To suppose that the Soviet such as the Soviet suc Union will respond to the SDI, which has the avowed aim of nullifying the Soviet auclear threat, with anything except a redoubled effort to increase the credibility of that nuclear attack force is to imagine the impossible.

That is the buge hole in President Reagan's argument. He got away with it in his Sept. 17 press conference, but Mikhail Gorbachev is not likely to be as indulgent. Somebody has to give the president a better argument than the gas mask analogy to use in Geneva in November - or better yet, a more plausible position to defend. You can't attack trade protectionism and defend "star wars" without bumping into yourself.

The Washington Past.

LETTER

Citizens and Nationals

Alexander Reinhardt (Letters. Sept. 11) makes up a fairy tale when he says naturalized Americans cannot legally give their nationality as American. Under the 14th Amendment of the Constitution, U.S. citizens and all accounts of the Constitution, U.S. citizens and all accounts the constitution. zens are all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and there should be no doubt whatever in anyone's mind that the nationality of all U.S. citizens is American.

U.S. nationals are persons, including native inhabitants of American Samoa, who have a right to U.S. passports - because in one way or another they owe allegiance to the United States or are subject to U.S. jurisdiction — but are not U.S. citizens

Reagan, Mozambique Leader Hold Talks

By David B. Ottaway Washington Past Server
WASHINGTON — President
Samora Machel of Mozambique, a dedicated Marxist who has turned to the United States have to the United States for economic and diplomatic support to bolster his war-battered and economically hard-pressed southern Africa na-tion, has been welcomed warmly at the White House by President Ronald Reagan.

Their two-hour meeting on Thursday was an improbable political encounter for both leaders, given Mr. Reagan's strong anti-Communist sentiments and Mr. Machel's equally strong commit-ment to Marxism and political ties to the Soviet bloc.

Conservatives strongly opposed Mr. Machel's visit. Senator Malcolm Wallop, a Republican of Wycom wanop, a Republican of wy-oming, and Representative Danny L. Burton, a Republican of Indi-ana, introduced legislation to pro-vide guerrillas fighting in Mozam-bique with as much as $5 million in aid during fiscal 1986 and to end U.S. economic assistance to the Mozambique government.

Administration officials have defended the economic aid and emergency assistance program to Mo-zambique, which totals about $40 million this year. They say the United States is responding to Mr. Machel's desire to move from socialist domestic policies and reliance on Moscow.

Despite the divergent ideological views of the two presidents, a senior U.S. official said after the meeting that they had discussed "at some length" the merits of the free enterprise system and "approaches that work and don't work" in economic development in "a very positive atmosphere." Mr. Reagan said in a statement that the meeting was meant to un-derscore U.S. determination to President Ronald Reagan meeting with President Samora Machel in the White House.

Mr. Reagan hailed Mr. Machel for taking "a step toward peace" in signing the Nkomati Accord with South Africa in March 1984. In it, Mozambique pledged to halt raids by black nationalist guerrillas into South Africa, and Pretoria agreed to stop backing the Mozambican National Resistance.

In his statement, Mr. Reagan also hailed Mozambican decisions to join the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, seek Western investment and strengthen continue playing "an active and the private sector. Mr. Reagan de-

Manuscript Collectors: An Eccentric, Obsessive, Greedy Breed

ONDON - Eccentric, obsesconflicting demands of megalomania and secrecy, dedicated to art but full of themselves, collectors in cultural history is out of proportion to their numbers. Such is the endearing portrait that emerges from an exhibition here.

Titled "Hidden Friends" and subtitled, using the Latin for the through Sept. 28.

The collector whose 43 manuscripts are displayed for the first time is not named, and his nationality is withheld. Only one clue is supplied: The collection is on indefinite loan to the Bibliothèque Publique et Universitaire in Geneva, which means the manuscripts are accessible on request. A brilliant catalog essay by Christopher de Hamel, Sotheby's

Sive, greedy, torn between the the role of Britain. "Because the Comité Internationale de Paléographie was meeting in late September, it seemed appropriate to arform a peculiar species whose role range some kind of exhibition which would reflect an aspect of the British contribution to the history of medieval manuscripts," he writes. "An area where Britain has differed from the rest of Europe is in the tradition of private owners buying and selling manuscripts. It was a peculiarly English idea that that passed through their hands. every educated gentleman should own a library Many historians will disagree. Private libraries blossomed in Renaissance Europe. In 19th-century France, collecting medieval manuscripts was as developed as in Britain. It seems even less appropriate to bring in the role of Britain as "the world center of the art trade" in connection with medieval manuscripts; the great names in the trade today are those of H. P Krause of New York and Pierre Beres of Paris. The great collectors are Belgian. French, German, Swiss, American. are reported as daily news in the papers" merely suggests that England is the only country whose papers Sotheby's expert is familiar

These lapses, made all the more amusing by de Hamel's stated wish not to be jingoistic, should not mar the reader's pleasure in the entertaining portraits of the art-market characters concerned with medieval illuminated manuscripts, and in the display of the manuscripts Sir Thomas Phillips (1792-1872), who amassed more than 60,000 manuscripts, comes out on top. "Has this man no heart?" a con-temporary asked. "It is shriveled up among the masses of parchment around him, and in the midst of which he spends his useless life."

De Hamel calls him "the most extraordinary, persistent, short-tempered, bigoted, conceited, obsessive, determined vellomaniac (as he called himself) who built up the greatest library of manuscripts ever assembled by one man." His vast house at Middle Hill in Worcester-To back up such a statement by shire was filled with dust-covered Although unable to reject fakes, Phillips had an eve for beauty. In the exhibition a ninth-century copy France is a masterpiece of Carolingian calligraphy.

The opposite type of collector is illustrated by Henry Yates Thompson (1839-1928), who decided early on that his collection was never to exceed 100 volumes, and who kept refining the collection to the end. He had the education and the financial means to become the archetypal medieval manuscript collector. His father was a rich Liverpool banker. Young Henry had his secondary schooling at Harrow and read classics at Cambridge University, where he excelled. An enthusiastic traveler, he spent his youth in Egypt, Palestine, India, the West Indies and North America, where he went to watch some of the fighting in the Civil War. He started collecting in his late 50s. De Hamel

Yates Thompson ranks among the first modern collectors to have seen to it that his works be reproduced. Four volumes of his "Descriptive Catalogues" and seven volumes of "Illustrations" of manuscripts came out between 1898 and 1918.

As many collectors do, Yates onymity of reserve collections. In the last volume of "Illustrations" he announced his intention to sell his collection so that "these precious manuscripts which have been to me of such absorbing interest shall go, in the language of Ed-mond de Goncourt" — the French man of letters was also a great art collector - " 'aux héritiers de mes gouts" (to the heirs of my tastes). Three sales took place at Sotheby's in 1919, 1920 and 1921, to the horror of the British Museum and other institutions. The Hours of leanne de Navarre was bought for £11,800 by Edmond de Rothschild, setting a record for manuscripts that was to hold for many years.

The residue of Yates Thompson's collection, consisting of manuscripts he had not sent to auction and others that had failed to sell, was bequeathed by his widow to the British Museum in 1941. As de Hamel puts it, "a catalogue is eagerly awaited." Yates Thompson would have relished this justification of his dislike of museums.

In 1861, when the Savile collection came up at Sotheby's, Thomas Phillips left a bid of £10 on an early versified translation of the Bible into French, Libri bought it for £77, wrote a 30-line catalog entry for it, and sent it straight back to Sotheby's, where Phillips bought it the year after for £100. The manuscript was acquired in 1976 at Someby's by the collector whose acquisitions are now displayed at Sotheby's, and it may be seen there. In 1848 Libri moved to London

When a curator of the Bib-liothèque Imperiale in Paris went to see Libri, he had no difficulty in establishing that a number of these items had been removed from public collections in France. Most of them were eventually returned.

In passing de Hamel provides invaluable bits of information to collectors. He describes and illustrates some 19th-century collectors' marks, sometimes scribbled in chalk or pencil. He reminds us that prices do not always go up, and that one may lose heavily when attempting to resell: A collector called Watler Sneyd bought more than 1,000 manuscripts from the heirs of a Venetian Jesuit dealer called Metteo Luigi Canonici. Of those he sent for sale to Sotheby's in June 1836, 85 percent were bought in, including a Venetian manuscript of about 1509 with four full-page miniatures, on display at the Sotheby's exhibition. Everything about "Plenty" (except for the ridiculous Golden Ending) is calculated to distance you emotionally from it. The director, Fred Schepisi ("The Chant of Junmy Blacksmith," "Barbarosa," 'Iceman'), and his cinematographer, Ian Baker, shot the movie in real light, which makes it hard on the eyes. Schepisi composed the movie mostly with long shots, which literally keep you at arm's length, and the staging is deliberately artificial. The effect is to keep things intellectual.

The rational chill of the movie is wedded to what it's about - good manners are part of what drives Susan mad — so the characters swim easily through it. There are only two you'd like to spend any time with, and, in one of the movriors). Mortared in this grey buie's small niceties, they cancel each

The science vs. religion debate at the heart of this tedious and contrived film, adapted by John Pielmeier from his play, commences as soon as a court-appointed psychiatrist (Jane Fonda), who is to determine whether Sister Agnes (Meg Tilly) is fit to stand trial for manslaughter, meets the mother superior (Anne Ban-croft). Fonda exclaims, "Tm not from the Inquisition!" Bancroft counters, "I'm not from the Middle Ages!" and proceeds to act as if shewere. O'Conor to Gwen John: Exhibitions At Barbican Link 4 Disparate Artists

By Max Wykes-Joyce ONDON — In its three and a half years of existence, the Barbican Art Gallery has established itself as one of Britain's best exhibition centers, as demonstrated in the current shows of works by four artists whose lives were joined by somewhat tenuous threads.

The first of the quartet was Roderic O'Conor (1860-1940), chief among late 19th- and early 20thcentury Irish painters. This is the set significant retrospective of his work. Born in County Roscommon to an affluent family, which moved to Dublin when O'Conor was 5 years old, he was sent to the prestigious Catholic School of Ample-forth in England. At age 19 he became a student at the Metropolitan School of Art in Dublin, where he won the Cowper Prize. While still at the Metropolitan School, he began studies at the Royal Hibernian Academy in Dublin, winning several prizes and showing paintings in the academy's annual exhi-

A Kaleidoscope of U.S. Design

By Suzanne Slesin New York Times Senice

N EW YORK — "High Styles: 20-Century American Design," which opened Thursday at the Whitney Museum of American Art, is a bold and often surprising look at the stylistic innovations in the design of American products and furnishings between 1899 and

The more than 300 objects in the show are divided into 15-year periods, each organized by a different curator. Unlike most other exhibits surveying design, this one does not try to establish a single aesthetic standard. Rather, the objects ranging from a Tiffany lamp to a granite cook top — seem to have been selected to challenge conventional notions of taste.

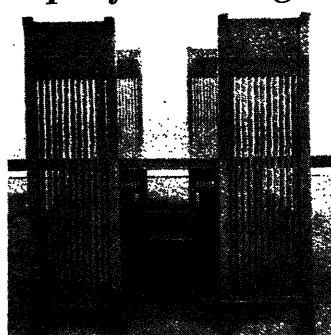

Eccentric directions in design as well as the familiar classic trends are represented in the objects chosen, which are arranged chronologically by period. Along with television sets and Eames chairs, teapots lamps, radios and clocks - massproduced industrial-design [are of the 1930s and '40s - there are dozens of handcrafted, one-of-akind collector's items such as a 1905 silver inkwell, a 1935 carved Steuben Glass bowl and a sinuous 1963 music stand. The amoebashaped tables that are synonymous with the 1950s appear in the dis-play of the period of their origins. the '30s. It is in such instances when viewers do a double take --that the show is most intriguing.

While design purists may balk at some of the more esoteric pieces and Bauhaus fans may find the familiar objects of their affections too few and far between, "High Styles" expands and diversifies the definition of design. A grab bag that mirrors the myriad and sometimes contradictory directions design has taken since 1900, the show offers flashes of style and taste rather than a comprehensive historical survey. Provocative and bound to be controversial, the exhibition, however it is perceived by different viewers, is not boring.

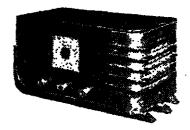

"I think there is a new patriotism now and a receptiveness to learn about the history of design," said Lisa Phillips, an associate curator of the Whitney and the director of the show.

The fact that the exhibit is taking place at the Whitney is in itself noteworthy. The museum has no permanent decorative arts or design collection and this is the first time it has ventured into the area. "We don't collect American design," Phillips explained, "and it did take a bit to convince the museum, although not too much." Supported by the Chase Mangether, continues through Feb. 16.

WITHOUT COMMUNISM RUSSIA WOULD BE THE GREATEST NATION ON EARTH

Andrei Sakharov, Yelesa Bonner, Anatoty Shcharansky, Raqui Wallenberg, Irina Grivnina and a few oher Russian dissidents are well known in the West. Nowever, they represent only the tip of the Iceberg. For example, who knows about the case of Mrs. Oksana Meshko? Like all other members of the Helsinki Monitoring Group. Mrs. Meshko has been arrested and sentenced to 5 months prison + 5 years exite in Siberio tor Anti-Soviet agitation and propagando. Mrs. Meshko is 80 years old, suffers from diabetes, hyperfension, rheumatism, is crippied and almost blind. The tenseratures in Siberia range from 10° to 40° C during 8 months of the year. Several months ago, she wrote from exite: "For me to winter here is like an unstrained athlete attempting to climb Mount Everest. I live here done in almost compiete Isolation. The winters here are hor become and the local inhabitum's frighten me. I'll never survive alone. ... I hope that 1000 people will at least write me. It is a shame that the mail has not so had." Mrs. Meshko served already 10 years during the Stalin era; her late busband and her son served each 10 years. Alfagether, the Meshko family gove more than 33 years of their lives in prison camps. In softe all several requests to the Soviet Authorities for anticipated dismissal and for emigration to Holland, Mrs. Meshko is still in Siberia, where she is dying all alone in the most disgraceful circumstances for human monthal: a harmless, old woman of 80 years, story in each of the more from thousand dramotic cases of dissidents, who are condemned for the rest of their lives, as well as their families.

NYSE Prices at 3-Month Low

at the lowest level in three months.

The broad-based technical rally that the market staged Thursday extended itself into Friday's early activity. The market was mixed though much of the session. The potential for market gyrations related to Friday's expiration of September stock index futures and options contracts contributed to some investor nervousness, analysis said

The Dow Jones industrial average turned lower in the afternoon and losses accelerated in the last half hour of trading. The Dow finished down 8.85 to 1,297,94. For the week the Dow fell 9.74 points.

Declines outnumbered advances, 763-722, among the 1,980 issues traded. Volume totaled 101.39 million shares, compared with 100.32 million Thursday.

Before the market opened, government projected, in its "flash" estimate of gross national product growth, that the economy was growing at a mediocre pace of 2.8 percent in the current quarter. The 2.8-percent rate was on the low end of most forecasts and represented only a slight pickup from the revised 1.9-percent growth in the second quarter. Wall Street's estimates for the GNP estimate ranged from 3 percent to 3.5 percent.

Peabody International Corp. was the most active NYSE-listed issue, up ¼ to 10%. Peabody said that litigation between it and companies controlled by Victor Posner, an investor, has

SATURDAY-SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 21-22, 1985

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM

This week, as they made plans to begin drafting what may be the most thorough overhaul of the federal income-tax system in a generation, the members of the House Ways and Means Commit-

Reagan's tax proposals by the committee staff. The analysis stunned the lawmakers, including some of the president's staunchest supporters. The analysis was done in terms of the average percentage increase in after-tax income, the amount left over after income taxes are paid and payroll taxes withheld. It showed that taxpayers in every income class below $75,000 a year would have an increase in after-tax income in 1987 of around percent if the president's entire package were enacted. For example, taxpayers with incomes of $10,000 to $20,000 would get an average increase of 1.2 percent, those from $20,000 to $30,000 would get nine-tenths of 1 percent, and those from $50,000 to $75,000, 1.1 percent.

incomes between $75,000 and $100,000 would be 1.9 percent, and for those between $100,000 and $200,000, 2.4 percent. And for taxpayers with incomes of more than $200,000, it would be a whopping 6 percent.

At this stage, no one can predict how Congress will act on the administration's proposals. But this much is clear: Congress will not approve a bill that gives the richest group an increase in spendable income six times greater than that given taxpayers of side economics know that two-tenths of 1 percent of the taxpayers do not cast many votes. Here are some of the steps that the Ways and Means Committee may take so that the tax benefits in its bill will not be so heavily skewed toward the wealthy:

the maximum tax rate would be reduced to 35 percent from 50 percent. Mr. Reagan and his aides argue that if the top rate is cut far enough it would stimulate productive economic activity and have actually increased since 1981, when the maximum rate was cut to 50 percent from 70 percent. The way to attack tax shelters, they say, is to impose a stiff minimum tax. There is considerable sentiment on the committee for putting Secretary James A. Baker 3d has said that the president has drawn "a line in the sand" on the question of the maximum rate. - Limiting the tax break on capital gains. Mr. Reagan would reduce the top rate on capital gains to 17.5 percent from 20 percent. In justification, the administration cites a Treasury Department report last week showing that reductions in capital-gains taxes in 1978 and 1981 (the top rate went to 20 percent from 49 percent) "resulted in modest increases in economic growth, capital formation, productivity and long-run consumption lev-

Calculating the Burden Of Reagan's Tax Proposals

New York Times Service ASHINGTON — There are several ways to analyze the effect of changes in U.S. tax law on people in different income classes — a process that tax planners call "burden analysis." Steel in U.S.: Focus Shifts to Price Wars

By Daniel F. Cuff
New York Times Service
NEW YORK — For the U.S. steel industry, imports remain a worry, but they are not the dominant issue they were a year ago when the president's program to control foreign shipments was announced. Today, the main problem is closer to home: The mills are caught up in a fierce battle among themselves for market share and are cutting each other up on prices.

"The complaint isn't about imports anymore; it's about domestic price-cutting," said

Charles A. Bradford, steel analyst at Merrill

On the surface, there are signs of progress, After years of trauma, the major mills are trim and relatively efficient. The results of their effort to reduce costs have received strong praise from analysts. The complacent management attitudes are gone, replaced by a competitive breed. Some companies have been turning a profit even with the rampant price-cutting.

But the improvement that has occurred cannot be credited to the impert program.

"Looking ahead a year ago at this time with the present import program," said James N. Rudolph, analyst at Wertheim & Co., one would have expected the industry would have been doing nicely by September 1985. In terms of expectations, things are worse."
In the past year, one major mill, WheelingPinsburgh Steel Co., entered into bankruptcy proceedings and is being struck by the steelworkers' union over its plan to reduce wages. Troubles have spread to many small mills, and plant closings have continued.

The battle for market share among the major mills is said to be fierce, led by United States Steel Corp., a company that used to announce the price increases that the rest of the industry followed. U.S. Steel has in-creased its market share to 17.6 percent in the second quarter from 16 percent in the first, Mr. Bradford estimated.

"The industry has had a price collapse, which is hurting the second half," said Peter Marcus, steel analyst at Paine Webber. The price of some products has fallen by as much as $70 a ton this year, he said. To be sure, imports still provide some pressure on prices, and the industry is still looking to the import control program to take hold. President Ronald Reagan, who has denied import relief to many industries, announced the steel program on Sept. 18, 1984, as the presidential election neared. The program alled on countries to agree voluntarily to limit their imports. But setting up the program took longer than expected and controls were not generally in place until spring.

The president's five-year program set its sights on reducing foreign market share to 18.5 percent. In July, import penetration fell to 21.9 percent, from a worrisome 28.1 percent in June. August figures were not immediately available. Donald H. Trautlein, chairman of the American Iron and Steel Institute as well as of Bethlehem Steel Corp., said July's performance created hope that the program "may be beginning to have some effect." But even if the program succeeds in bringing imports under control, some analysts fear that the rewards will be short term. They fear that import controls will increase the imports of finished products that contain steel, hurting the customers of the mills and eventually the steel industry itself.

John C. Tumazos, analyst at Oppenheimer & Co., said he expected a 1-percent decline in demand for domestic steel next year, even with trade protection. He believes the development of plastic auto body panels will displace 4 percent of domestic steel shipments over the next decade.

In the recent past, steel consumption has declined because of trends toward smaller cars and aluminum beverage cans. Many analysts believe that any major gain in consump-tion in this business cycle, such as in durable goods, has already occurred.

All this means that the mills must continue to cut costs, analysts say. They fear that any short-term success brought about by import controls would cool the desire to hold down expenses and whet the unions' appetite for a larger share of the pie.

The quarter's increase translates into a 12-month annual growth rate of 7.9 percent, adjusted for infla-tion, compared with a 0.8-percent annual rate in January-March.

Masahiko Koido, Sumitomo Bank's chief economist, said the main reason for the strong growth was a 4.9-percent increase in exports, compared with January-March, when they fell 1.3 percent from fourth-quarter 1984.

Exports accounted for 1 percentcrease, agency officials said, with nese consumers. the remainder attributed to increased domestic demand. Officials said the increase in exports was led by car shipments to the United States and television shipments to China.

Consumer spending, an indicator of domestic demand, rose just 0.7 percent, slowing from 0.9 percent in the first quarter. The officials attributed the decline to a lack of increase in workers' incomes.

The preliminary GNP report comes amid a growing dispute over Japan's huge trade surplus with the United States, which is expected to reach $50 billion this year. The U.S trade deficit with Japan rose to $37 billion last year and Washington has put heavy pressure on Tokyo to

Mr. Koido said more than a third of Japan's exports go to the United States. He said Japanese exports would probably continue to grow in the current quarter.

Mexico Out of Compliance With IMF Plan, Blocking $900 Million in Aid

Business Bears the Brunt Of Australia Tax Reform

By David Skinner

Reuters
SYDNEY — Australia's business sector will bear the brunt of the package of tax-reform measures announced this week by Trea-surer Paul Keating, according to economists and businessmen.

But it is too early to fully assess the impact of the changes, which vary in the timing of their introduction, they said.

The measures include an increase in company tax to 49 percent for 1986-87, from 46 percent, accompanied by an end to double taxation of dividends, a capitalgains tax, tax on foreign earnings and tax on fringe benefits to be paid by employers.

The package appears to contain a number of pluses and minuses for growth and economic development, the Business Council of Australia said. Eric Mayer, the chairman of the council's task force on taxation review, said the council was con-cerned about the significant overall increase in business tax, given the current fragile investment climate. He said it was also concerned about the fringe-benefits tax, the dends, impact of the capital-gains tax on investment and incentive, notably on small businesses, and the impact of the foreign-credits tax on efforts by Australian companies to expand, he said. Foreign earnings will be taxed from 1987-88 after credits for foreign tax.

Mr. Mayer said the council endorsed cuts in the personal incometax marginal rates. The top rate will fall to 49 percent from 60 percent in two stages. He said, however, that the endorsement was qualified supported by Mr. Keating. Britain Reports Growth in GDP In 2d Quarter

LONDON - Britain's gross domestic product rose an average of 5 percent in the second quarter from a year earlier, according to provisional figures released Friday by the Central Statistical Office.

Allowing for distortion caused by the coal miners' strike that ended in March, the growth rate was 4 percent, the office said. Government sources said that after adjustment for the coal dispute, gross domestic product showed very little growth between the first and second quarters. Gross domestic product measures a country's output in goods and services, minus investment income from operations abroad. Real income grew by 4 per-cent between the second quarters of 1984 and 1985, while consumer spending at constant prices rose 2 percent in the period. General government expenditure expanded about 1 percent between first and second quarters this year, to about 1 percent higher than in the second quarter of 1984.

Commenting on the figures, the Central Statistical Office said there was no clear pattern that would allow a firm prediction on when the next turning point in economic activity would occur.

Thailand Lowers Ceiling On Debt to $1 Billion

ZURICH — Switzerland's gross domestic product rose by a real 3 percent in the second quarter of 1985, the federal statistics office in BANGKOK — Thailand has lowered its foreign-debt ceiling to $1 billion from $1.3 billion in the year ending September 1986, Finance Minister Sommai Hoontrakul said Friday.

kul said Friday.

He said the reduction was needed to bring the debt-service ratio to less than 20 percent of export earnings, because of lower projected. That export revenues this year and in 1986. The new limit compares with a $1.6 billion ceiling in the current year and actual borrowings of about $1.09 billion.

United Press International TOKYO — Nippon Steel Corp. said Friday that it has begun talks with Inland Steel Co., the fourth-largest U.S. steelmaker, to set up a joint venture to produce steel primarily for the auto market."

If agreement is reached, the two companies would build a cold rolling steel plant in the U.S. Midwest with a capacity of 1 million tons a year, said the Nihon Keizai Shimbun, the Japanese economic daily.

Under a five-year voluntary export restraint agreement. signed last year, Japan's quota of steel exports to the United States has been limited to only 5.8 percent of the U.S. market. A spokesman for Nippon Steel, the world's No. 1 steel maker, confirmed the negotia-tions with Inland Steel but described them as "very fluid." The spokesman said financing for an agreement had not yet been arranged.

The Nihon Keizai report said that Inland Steel, which is based in Chicago, wanted the plant to increase its competitiveness in the U.S. market, and that Nippon Steel wanted to secure its share in the growing market provided by Japanese automakers setting up plants in the United States,

In three years, Japanese automakers are expected to produce 1.2 million vehicles annually in the United States. This would require 400,000 tons of cold rolled steel plates, Nihon Keizai

CBS News Cutting 125 Jobs Amid Corporate Tightening

New York Times Service NEW YORK — In the most severe single cutback to hit network television news, CBS announced Thursday the elimination of 125 news jobs, representing a 10-percent reduction in the staff of 1,250. The cutback was more sweeping than had been anticipated. Edward M. Joyce, the president of CBS News, said in a memorandum to his staff that the cutbacks were caused by "a number of unanticipated adverse financial circumstances" including "in part the con-sequences of successfully resisting the takeover attempt, a listless economy and a market softness in the advertising marketplace for the balance of this year and 1986.

Last month CBS bought back 21 percent of its stock to block Ted Turner, the Atlanta news executive, in a takeover attempt. As a result CBS will have increased its total debt to about $700 million by the end of this year, compared with $300 million before the stock pur-

If there is any doubt about the length of the General Foods shadow in the supermarket, one only has to consider that the company is the country's No. 1 maker of coffee, frozen vegetables, frozen novcity desserts, sliced meats, fresh baked goods, table syrup, pow-dered soft drinks and packaged

Five years ago, General Foods was reliant on coffee. Throughout the 1970s, in fact, it was a hibernating giant, doing little to change its product mix.

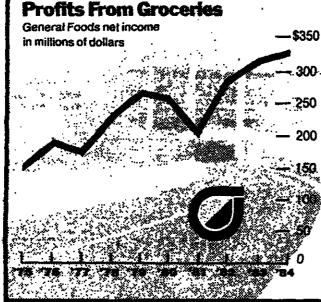

But it bolted into this decade ready to extend its kingdom. It is fortifying its lead in desserts and beverages, while at the same time moving into main-course foods and gourmet items. And what it cannot readily make in its labs, it has willingly paid for on the acquisition

Although earnings improvements are still slow in coming. Wall Street clearly feels that the $9-billion company is poised to deliver results. General Foods stock, selling as low as $29 a share in 1982, has zoomed, hovering near $90 last week, although it shed $4 on Thursday to close at $84.75.

"It's a premier company in the food industry, or for that matter in the whole consumer goods indusury," said Roger Cummins, a food analyst at Wertheim & Co. EC Imposes Restrictions On Turkish Clothing BRUSSELS — The European Community on Friday imposed stringent restrictions on? sales of inexpensive clothing from Turkey in reply to Turkey's refusal last week to negotiate a restraint agreement, a spokeswoman said. The executive commission has placed quotas throughout the community on imports of Turkish T-shirts, pullowers, trousers, skirts and bed linen. The restrictions, following increasing pressure from European manufacturers who say Turkish textile exports are at unreasonably high levels, were imposed to prevent serious injury to the EC industry, the spokeswoman said.

The Commerce Department's "flash" estimate showed that the U.S. gross national product was growing at an annual rate of 2.8 percent in the third quarter of this year. Dealers said traders were disappointed because they had experted an expansion of 3 percent to 3.5 percent in the GNP, the measure of the country's total output of goods and services.

The result is a lower trading range for the dollar," said a West German dealer.

Dealers also said the fact that the estimate appeared to have been leaked before its release Friday may also have depressed the dollar. The flash estimate is based on relatively inconclusive statistics and is subject to considerable revision later.

concentrated among upper-income groups." Indeed, in 1982, the last year for which data are available, taxpayers with incomes of more than $100,000 reported 8 percent of the total income in the country but 53 percent of the capital gains. Rather than reduce the capitaleains rate, many committee members are talking about raising it. Restoring the two-earner deduction. Under current law, families with two wage earners can take a deduction of up to $3,000 a year to help offset the disadvantage of their having to file a joint return. The president would disallow the write-off. The two-earner deduction primarily benefits middle-income families. Internal Revenue Service statistics show that two-thirds of the couples with annual incomes between $30,000 and $75,000 take advantage of the deduction. Less than a third of those filing a joint return with incomes above $200,000 use it.

Archie Moore Remembers: The Fight, And the Loss

By John Ed Bradley

LAS VEGAS - Archie Moore sits on the edge of the king-size bed in his hotel room and stares out the window. He is wearing one of those cro-cheted beanies he likes so much, with a little gold bulldog pinned to its center.

At least it looks like a bulldog, though it may be a mongoose. That is what they called him a long time ago: The Old Mongoose. Ancient Archie Moore, light heavyweight champion of the world.

He is remembering that night in September 30 years ago, when he took it to Rocky Marciano and Rocky took it to him. and as a result they both left the ring changed men.

"But I could have taken it from him," Moore says. "I could have been heavyweight champion of the world, I could have ... And his voice, once strong with possibility, fades. For the most part, Moore, who is 71, enjoys talking about the old days, has been doing it all week as Larry Holmes prepared for his fight Satur-day night with Michael Spinks. Moore was hired as a consultant to Holmes, the world heavyweight champ preparing to defend his title on the 30th anniversary of the night Moore and Marciano took it to each other, and Marciano won the last fight of

If Holmes beats Spinks, the undisputed light heavyweight champ, he will tie Marciano's 49-0 record, which, Moore says, would have been 48-1 had a certain something not happened.

And that is why he is looking off through the window: because he cannot forgive or forget, because he cannot let go of the memory.

He remembers: "It was comical, the way Rocky looked in the ring. He was like a bull with gloves on, trying to fight. From all I'd seen of him, his way was to come out like a swarm of bees, swarming

"But this fight with me he did not come out that way" and "I said to him, 'Rocky, I thought you'd come out to fight.' And that made him mad, so I jabbed him once or twice and whistled a few over

Moore assumes the classic boxing pose, fists clenched tightly. He takes a stab at the bright air, then asks you to picture the ropes around him. The window there is one side of the ring, the wall Moore remembers: "In the second round, he it came out swinging, which was okay. A fighter can size up what's coming immediately, and I saw what was about to happen "I feinted him and he threw an overhand right, and it sailed off, because I stepped back. Then I moved in, and I hit him with an upppercut. I hit him and watched him fall." Moore falls to the floor, but at this moment he is not Archie Moore. He is Rocky Marciano, his old friend, down on his knees with both arms extended for support, waiting for the count.

Moore counts off two seconds — the two seconds that referee Henry Kessler counted out above the roar of 60,000 in New York — and he, Moore, who is Marciano, pulls himself off the floor and leans against the window, against the ropes.

His eyes blur. He looks embarrassed, yet he is crown. He notes his gloves high can't, I'm Rocky Marciano, and you can't hurt with him.

all over again; it is Sept. 21, and Archie Moore has the rest."

Archie Moore fell to the punches of Rocky Marciano in the eighth round of their historic fight on Sept. 21, 1955.

just dropped the heavyweight champion of the world to his knees.

"I thought, 'I got him now, I got him.' And he's standing up against those ropes, looking at the people as if he wants to apologize for going down. The referee looked for me to go to the corner clear across the ring, but I'm smart, you see. I'm in the one right here." Moore hurries past the window and stands next to the television set. "All I have to do is swing out and hit him again,

ATLANTA — Do not dismiss the Cincinnati Reds just yet. There may be a pennant race in the Na-tional League West after all. There is for sure in the East Division, where the New York Mets drew to within one game of the St. Louis Cardinals on Thursday night. The Reds got 19 hits in defeating the Atlanta Braves, 15-5. That, with Pirates 8, Expos 6: R.J. Reynolds' homer, leading off the 10th, gave Pittsburgh its victory in Mon-

Houston's triumph over first-place Los Angeles, put the Reds only five and one-half games behind the Dodgers. And those teams play each other three more times.

"We still have a lot of games left," said Nick Esasky, whose three-run home run in the seventh inning delivered the game-winning run. "If we keep doing what we're doing now, we've got a chance of

In the seventh, with Atlanta leading, 3-2, Pete Rose led off with a single off loser Pascual Perez. Dave Parker doubled and Esasky hit reliever Gene Garber's first pitch into the left-field seats.

Rose got three hits in the game to go over the 100 mark for the 23d straight season, breaking the record he had shared with Ty Cobb and Carl Yastrzemski.

The Reds got nine runs in the ninth inning, four on Parker's grand slam, to make it easy for Tom Browning to win his 18th game, most among rookies in the major leagues.

"The last two times out, Γve had a nine-run inning, and it's nice to see that," Browning said. Astros 6, Dodgers 5: In Los Angeles, Craig Reynolds hit two triples and a single and drove in the go-ahead run as Houston, behind 17 hits, won its ninth straight. The Dodgers scored three times in the eighth but left the tying run on in the minth as Enos Cabell hit into a fielder's choice and pinchhitter Greg Brock grounded out. Mets 5, Cubs 1: Sid Fernandez held Chicago to one hit - Gary Matthews' third-inning homer for eight innings in New York while Gary Carter, Darryl Strawberry and George Foster homered

Coleman Steals His 100th Base

The Associated Press PHILADELPHIA - Rookie Vince Coleman of the St. Louis Cardinals became the third player in National League his-tory to steal 100 or more bases ond in the fifth inning of Thursday night's game. The only other National League players to steal 100 bases in one season were Maury Wills, 104 in 1962, and Lou Brock, 118 in 1974.

It was Coleman's 146th game. Brock, when he set the National League record in 1974, had 106 at that point. Padres 11. Giants 3: Kurt Bevacqua singled in two runs during a six-run second inning as San Diego won in San Francisco. (AP, UP1)

Angels Win, Tying Royals in AL West

CHICAGO — Reggie Jackson hit two home runs Thursday night for the California Angels as they beat the Chicago White Sox. 8-0. and tied for the lead in the American League West.

But while the Angels were tying the Kansas City Royals, the New York Yankees were fit to be tied. The AL West became the closest division race in baseball after the Seattle Mariners beat the Royals, 6-4, to complete a four-game sweep, and the the Angels John Candelaria shut out the White Sox on a six-hitter.

In the East, the idle Toronto Blue Jays' lead became five and one-half games with the Yankees' seventh straight loss, a 10-3 drubbing by the Detroit Tigers.

the Angels scored a run in the third inning, then got to starting pitcher Tom Seaver in the seventh for three runs. Jackson hit a tworun homer in the eighth and his 529th in the majors in the ninth.

"I'm really enjoying this pennant race," said Candelaria, who came to the Angels on Aug. 2 in a trade from Pittsburgh and pitched his first shutout since July 1984. "If we keep playing the way we have, this thing is going to go down right to the end."

Mariners 6, Royals 4: In Kansas City, Missouri, Alvin Davis and Dave Henderson doubled during 2 two-run ninth that gave Seattle its ninth victory in 10 games against the Royals this season.

The Mariners had tied at 4 with two runs in the eighth off Dan Quisenberry, then beat the Royals ace reliever in the ninth. Davis led off with a double and pinch-runner Ricky Nelson was sacrificed to third before Henderson doubled and scored on John Moses' single. When the Royals' Lonnie Smith hit a two-run homer in the fifth, it ended a club-record string of 30 scoreless innings.

Tigers 10, Yankees 3: Darrell Evans hit two of his team's four homers in Detroit and New York's newly acquired Joe Niekro was chased in the second inning, having given up six runs on seven hits.

"It happens to great teams," said the Yankees' manager, Billy Martin. "You can't give up. It's very frustrating. All of a sudden our pitchers stop pitching and our hit-ters stop hitting. Usually, you have one or the other. But both of them? You can't even manage. What can you do when you're down seven or eight runs?

Gary Carter, who earlier had hit a home run, was tagged out by the Cubs' Jody Davis as he tried to score in the seventh inning. But Mets won, 5-1, and closed to one game of the lead in the National League's East Division when St. Louis was beaten, 6-3, in Philadelphia.

Dolphins-Chiefs Game May Become a Family Affair

New York Times Service

NEW YORK -- The Kansas City Chiefs and the Miami Dolphins have made their occasional meetings memorable. Perhaps the most celebrated was their American Conference playoff game in 1971, which remains the longest National Football League game ever played. It was decided in the 23d minute of overtime, when Garo Yepremian of the Dolphins kicked a 37-yard field goal.

The Dolphins will get help in their defen-sive backfield. Veteran Glenn Blackwood, who rejoined the team only last week after a long contract holdout, will start Sunday. The Dolphins are favored by 5 points.

AMERICAN CONFERENCE

Houston (1-1) at Pittsburgh (1-1): No longer the pushovers they once were, the young Oilers are playing with unaccustomed enthusiasm, evident throughout last week's 16-13 loss in Washington. could get it with the expected return of Harvey Salem at left tackle. The Steelers looked flat in losing to Cleveland on Monday night, rushing for only 54 yards and having difficulty completing passes. (Steelers by 6 points.)
New England (1-1) at Buffalo (0-2): Both lost last Sunday, but the Bills by more than Bo other teams. They were routed by the Jets, 42-3, which makes it hard to believe they can correct all the things necessary to beat the Patriots, a better team than the Jets. The Patriots had a bad time against the Bears, rushing for 27 yards; but the Bills gave up 288 rushing yards to the Jets. (Patriots by 6.)

San Diego (1-1) at Cincinnati (0-2): This is a vastly important game for both teams. Both had the same problem last Sunday: defense. The Bengals appear to have the edge this time, since there may be no limit to the number of passing yards the Chargers can give up. Seattle got 494 in a wild, 49-35 victory so, if nothing else, the Chargers' comerbacks still may be a little tired. (Bengals by 4.)

NATIONAL CONFERENCE

St. Louis (2-0) at New York (1-1): The Cardinals have given up 51 points in two games, which puts this game in reach for the Giants. But their secondary, which has held up well so far, has not yet faced a quarter-back of Neil Lomax's ability. He threw for ly are. A year ago, they had the top-rated pass defense in the league, yet they have given up 395 and 327 yards in the air. Steve DeBerg, the Buccaneers' quarterback, has played better than any of the Saints' quarterbacks. (Saints by 2½.)

INTERCONFERENCE New York Jets (1-1) vs. Green Bay (1-1) at Milwankee: Despite the lopsided victory last week, the Jets have reason for concern. The Packers, in defeating the Giants, got excel-lent play from their defensive line, holding the Giants to 76 yards rushing and sacking Phil Simms five times. The Packers also expect to have two key defensive players back, linebacker Mike Douglass and safety

Mark Murphy. (Packers by 6.) Cleveland (1-1) at Dallas (1-1): With Danningham and a bad offensive line, the Eagles downs the week before, to 178 yards and 1 will have difficulty winning even though the touchdown. The Browns also picked up some offensive help Thursday, acquiring veteran wide receiver John Jefferson from Green Bay a day after Jefferson ended his contract holdout. (Cowboys by 7.)

Denver (1-1) at Atlastia (0-2): Three of the Falcons' defensive backs were hart last Sunday, and that should make it almost impossible for them to beat the Broncos. John Elway pleted 28 passes for 353 yards and 4 touchdowns in a 34-23 victory over the Saints. Detroit (2-0) at Indianapolis (0-2): Each of the Lions' victories has been close, but this is likely to be a rout. The Colts have yet to demonstrate any semblance of a running game. Nor have they been able to mount any pressure on the opposing quarterback. (Lions by 5.) San Francisco (1-1) at Los Angeles Raiders (1-1): The Raiders' man-to-man defensive scheme showed an uncommon vulnerability to the long pass in a 36-20 loss to Kansas City on Thursday night. The 49ers usually pick a team into submission with short undemeath passing, but this time might try throwing long more often. (49ers by 3.)

MONDAY NIGHT Los Angeles Rams (2-0) at Seattle (2-0): Eric Dickerson, the league's leading rusher last season, and nose tackle Greg Meisner are expected to make their first starts this season, but it is more likely that quarterback Dieter Brock will determine whether the Rams win. The Seahawks have less trouble stopping runners than passers; Dan Fouts threw for 440 yards last Sunday despite the Seahawks winning, 49-35. (Seahawks by 61/2.)

Golden Horn Cleanup

By Vedat Erdamar The Associated Press

T STANBUL -- This city is clean-I ing up the Golden Horn, the nists. Cetin Altan of the newspaper once-scenic waterway that was a Gunes, recently lauded Dalan's acplayground for Ottoman sultans but is now an open sewer. Mayor Bedrettin Dalan is razing buildings, shipyards and a cityowned slaughterhouse that have been spewing filth into the waterway since the start of industrialization in Turkey 50 years ago.

In some instances, Dalan, 44, has ignored or circumvented court orders against demolition.

The Golden Horn flows through the heart of Istanbul, once the eastern capital of the Roman Empire and later the seat of government of the Ottoman Empire. Some of the Ottomans' most famous mosques and palaces can be seen from the 4.5-mile (7.5-kilometer) waterway. which divides the older part of the city from the newer.

The horn, so called because of its shape, runs south into the Bosporus, the strait that divides Europe and Asia. The Golden Horn was one of the world's great tourist sites until its steach drove visitors away.

"The color of the Golden Horn waters will be as blue as my eyes." the mayor declared after he was elected in March 1984. Installations on the shores have been pouring animal, human and industrial wastes into the inlet, turning the water black.

The rotten-egg odor rising from the Golden Horn permeates the air over a wide area. Few people now take boat rides on the waters once plied by the pleasure craft of the Dalan's effort has drawn praise from many, but also some criti-

"The entire resources of a municipality have been mobilized against us with total disregard for human rights and property rights." said Aziz Sasa, a businessman whose depots along the Golden Horn are to be razed.

Judicial sources say the city may be embroiled in court cases for years to come.

But Mustafa Karasu, 47, a taxi driver, supports the mayor even though his sister's house fell to Dalan's bulldozers. He is a resident of Balat, on the shore of the Golden Horn. "If they keep up this speed, I may be able to go swimming in the Golden Horn soon. Already the air has improved."

One of Turkey's leading columtion as "revolutionary in the history of the city."

Altan pointed out that the Goldwarehouses, factories, derelict en Horn project was only the largest and most dramatic of several that the major has initiated to clean up the city of six million.

Dalan has closed a cement factory in one district and razed buildings in the Persembe Pazari, or Thursday Market, a clogged center of small industry, wholesalers and ironworkers near the horn area.

All together about 1.2 million square meters (13 million square feet) of land is scheduled to be cleared of buildings along the shore, city officials said. They said more than half this work has already been done in the Golden Horn project, including the cleaning up of the Thursday Market About 55 percent of that land belonged to the city. The remaining 45 percent, privately owned, is gradually being bought by the city, the officials said.

About 622 factories employing 30,000 people, and 2,020 other business sites, as well as thousands of homeowners, will be affected by the project. Deputy Mayor Unal Beyazid said. The plan calls for relocating the businesses to the outskirts of Istanbul.

Dalan has said that historical buildings, such as the Eyup Mosque complex, several summer palaces of Ottoman sultans and a 19th-century Bulgarian church,

On the ground cleared, the city has begun building playgrounds

A new sewage system is to complete the project. For the southern section of the system, Istanbul has obtained an $88-million loan from the World Bank. The mayor expects the sewage system to be completed by 1988.

Then, according to the city's plan, foul water will be pumped out of the inlet and fresh water from the Bosporus will run in, bringing fish and other water life that should help further clean the bed of the Golden Horn.

Serge Gainsbourg's Talent for Scandal

By Mark Hunter

PARIS — Twenty years after his first hit, "La Javanaise," lifted him out of the piano bars where he had made a living for 15 years, Serge Gainsbourg, 57, has become a French national institution (not to mention a Chevalier of Arts and Letters, as of last year). His latest album, "Love on the Beat." has gone platinum in France (400,000 copies sold), and his three-week stand at the Casino de Paris, which began Friday. is a certain sellout. You might think Gainsbourg would be a perfectly contented man.

You would be wrong. "I'm very disabused," Gainsbourg said in his elegantly furnished apartment loaded with an electronic player piano, works of art and an original manuscript of "La Marseillaise," the French national anthem. "Because, when you have everything, you have nothing," he explained. "And I have everything, everything."

From the top - among contemporary French singers, only Johnny Hallyday and Jacques Higelin have comparable followrecalls that during the German Occupation his father, a Russian Jewish émigré, was forced to leave his job as a musician by French musicians who threatened to denounce him. In the closing years of the war, Gainsbourg hid in a forest to escape being turned over to the Nazis.

He came out of the war with the habit of following his own lead. Called into the French Army in 1948, he went AWOL for three days — "to be with a girl." he said — and was punished by being sent to a "very tough" disciplinary battalion. "Something no one remembers," he remarked, "is that I was a very good machine-gunner.

One could say that Gainsbourg remained a gunner but shifted targets to what he calls "very important taboos in France."

"The first is religion, and I drink to that," he said, sipping a Pernod, "because I said on one of my records. God is Jewish, Marx is Jewish, Trotsky was Jewish' and that was taboo for the

It explicitly represented the act of lovemaking, in words and sound - and was a hit as well as a scandal.

> "And the last," said Gainsbourg, "is patriotism." This pro-vided the material for his most famous song, "Aux Armes Et Caetera," a reggae version of "La Marseillaise," in 1979. Gainsbourg did the song in his trademark "talk-over" style to a beat provided by Jamaican musicians; the talk involved cutting off the refrain and substituting an ironic declaration of "etcetera." French patriots were infuriated.

The main problem, Gainsbourg maintains, "was that the French couldn't accept six blacks and a Russian Jew singing 'La Marseillaise."

Apparently, attitudes have changed. Gainsbourg recounted with relish that "a few days ago I was in a nightclub, and a guy came up with his son, a para-trooper — and the kid said, 'Mr.

PEOPLE 2,500 at AIDS Benefit

More than 2,500 people, including Elizabeth Taylor, Shirley Maclent or glorify drug and alcohol use. Lame and Mayor Tom Bradley, Zappa, 44, and Dee Snider of the crowded into a Los Angeles hotel ballroom Thursday night at Hollywood's "Commitment to Life" benefit dinner for victims of acquired immune deficiency syndrome. AIDS Project Los Angeles. sponsor of the dinner, hopes the total raised will be $1 million. The dinner was originally scheduled for a smaller ballroom, but after Rock Hudson announced in July that he had AIDS, the event had to be moved. "I've handled a hundred dinners and when the news started about Rock Hudson, I've never seen anything take off like this one," said Lucille Polachek of Events Unlimited, which handled sales of tickets at $250 to $500 a person. Hudson bought $10,000 worth but was too ill to attend. He sent a telegram that said in part: "I am not happy that I am sick. I am not happy that I have AIDS. But if that is helping others, I can, at least, know that my own mistortime has had some positive worth. President Ronald Reagan also sent a telegram, saying he had made halting the spread of AIDS 2 "top priority." His message was preceded by hissing from some people, prompting an angry response from Burt Reynolds: "I don't care what your political persuasions may be. But if you don't want me to read it, than go outside." His comment brought cheers. Entertaining at the dinner were such performers as Carol Burnett, Sammy Davis Jr., Rod Stewart, Cyndi Lauper and Disham Carroll. Taylor and Reynolds auctioned off three small Andy Warhol paintings; the buyer, at $25,000, was the producer Jon Peters. Other items raised $56,000.

At a Senate hearing on a plan to put warning labels on certain rock records, a pair of musicians mocked the prominent Washington wives who support the idea. Sena-tor Slade Gorton, Republican of Washington, told Frank Zappa that his comments were "boorish, incredibly and insensibly insulting to Tipper Gore, wife of Senat Albert Gore, Democrat of Tennessee, and Susan Baker, wife of Treasury Secretary James Baker. The two helped found the Parents' Music Resource Center, a Washington-based organization of parents worried about rock lyrics that are group Twisted Sister said they found the parents' efforts misgrided and unduly restrictive. At one point, Zappa mimicked Mrs. Baker's Southern accent. He called the group's proposals a bid to "housebreak all composers and performers because of the lyrics of a few." Gorton told Zappa. "You could manage to give the Constitution of the United States a bad name, if I felt you had the slightest understanding of it. Snider said his song "Under the Blade" dealt with fear of surgery, and added. "The only sado-masochism, bondage and rape in this song is in the mind? Mrs. Gore." Asked by Senator In Rockefeller, Democrat of West Virginia, why he attacked Mrs. Gore, Snider said he was angry at the impact the women and their backers had. Some youngsters are now not allowed to buy his records he said. Mrs. Gore said the parents' group wanted the record industry to label records with a watting about content, make lyrics available to the consumer before purchase, and create a panel to set up guidelines for determining which records should be labeled. Senior James J. Exon, Democrat of No. braska, called the hearing by the Senate Commerce Committee "the largest media event I've ever sem objecting that no one has proposed legislation to regulate lyrics. Staley Gortikov, president of the Recording Industry Association of America, said 24 members of the organization would put labels in certain records stating. Parenal Guidance - Explicit Lyncs."
